

Top Tier mailer: four directions for the front

This is a roofing mailer going to homeowners around Albertville, Minnesota. It has one asset most roofing mail does not: a real, filed Minnesota legislative document showing insurers are moving coverage on older roofs to depreciated (Actual Cash Value) payouts. Every direction below is a different way to frame that one fact. The layout is rough on purpose. The question is the hook, not the polish.

Which direction has the most life in it, and what would you push further?

A. The disclosure Recommended direction

Minnesota just changed the rules on older roofs.

FILED WITH THE STATE

"...a 10-year-old roof would have non-recoverable depreciation applied to it."

Insurance Federation of Minnesota, letter dated February 11, 2026, filed with the Legislature's insurance task force.

States a documented statewide fact, not a claim about the reader's own roof, so it is true for every household that gets it. Top Tier is the neighbor passing along news the insurer will not. This is the most accurate and the most unusual, because the proof is real and filed.

C. The plain neighbor

B. The clock

At 10 years, your roof stops being fully covered.

YOUR ROOF TURNS

10

Turns roof age into a deadline the homeowner did not know existed. Keeps the strong 10 as the hero. Sharper and more personal, at the cost of assuming the reader's roof is around that age.

D. The question

We can't help with your insurance. We can help with your roof.

Leads with the honest, disarming line instead of a scare. Stands out precisely because it does not shout, which is the opposite of every storm-chaser postcard in the same mailbox. Useful over loud.

How old is your roof? Your insurance company is counting.

A question pulls the eye, and the twist (someone is already tracking the answer, and it is not you) delivers the stakes in the second line. Higher risk, higher engagement.
